

Children are often asking, "What's the use?" As a rule the question is asked not for information but it means "there is no use." This common and saucy inquiry should be suppressed. It is right for them to ask the question for information. The tone of the voice and the circumstances under which question is asked enable us to decide as to the character of the question. Children should be taught to respect the acts and words of parents and teachers. One way to do this is to check the spirit exhibited in asking questions which criticize the judgment of parents and teachers. No better spirit can be cultivated in children, that will produce a better element of citizenship, than respect for the judgment of parents, and teachers. How important, then, that we who occupy either position be careful! How important that there should be co-operation between parents and teachers!

SCHOOL SIGNALS.

By them, we mean such ways and means of calling and dismissing classes, as are employed by every teacher.

In purpose, we all use them for saving time, for gaining system and promptness in our work. All will admit their utility as a means of saving time. How awkward it seems, when a class is allowed to come straggling to recitation, one at a time. A teacher is very careless who will allow it, and his pupils can blame him for many careless habits formed in consequence.

In the school room—that nursery of habits and tendencies—there, we should find everything going after systematic plans; of course all can't have systematic plans as are found in well organized graded schools, but all can have a significant set of signals, and have them closely followed. By significant signals, we mean those that have some meaning, some point in them. Another great purpose of them, is, that we may have our pupils become systematic and careful.

School signals to be effective must be obeyed, and promptly, too. No signals at all are better than a cumbersome set of evolutions, which are never enforced. Even in the smallest particulars, have your signals promptly and correctly carried out. It helps the regular school work and helps the general appearance of pupils, when they obey, fully, a set of meaning signals. Insist upon promptness. For calling classes and dismissing the same, for calling and dismissing school, most teachers use a call-bell, or some familiar word of command. Where bells are not convenient, for calling or dismissing a class. The words: "Ready! rise! pass!" can be very well used; again, calling the numbers 1, 2, 3, is an excellent plan. I am predisposed to the number signal as it is less troublesome. It demands more careful attention on the part of pupils than the other.

It is not necessary to call the name of any succeeding class; have the pupils be giving attention to your daily programme, so they may know when to obey signals. I try to have my classes so arranged as to dismiss a class and at the same time call another, by same signals. Those who have never tried the plan, let me insist on your trying it. A few more words relative to the member: have your signals few, and have them mean something. I've visited schools where arbitrary signals were used to such an extent as to cause confusion whenever a class was called. Again, give your signals in a firm tone of voice and with the downward inflection; the philosophy of uncertainty condemns the other inflection.
